

Certified Mail Manager (CMM)

Professional Certification for Corporate Mailing Managers

The In-Plant Printing and Mailing Association's (IPMA) Certified Mail Manager (CMM) designation establishes a professional standard of proficiency for the in-house mail management profession. Certification is achieved through demonstrated management experience, professionalism and successful completion of a comprehensive examination.

Objectives

The objectives of the Certified Mail Manager designation are:

- To encourage individual professional growth and attainment of technical and managerial knowledge;
- To create a positive image and advance the stature of effective in-house mail managers;
- To emphasize the knowledge and expertise required to excel in the in-house mail management field;
- To identify, through the CMM designation, those managers who have attained a high level of competence and professionalism.

The CMM designation will be awarded to applicants who satisfy the program requirements outlined in this brochure.

Eligibility

Candidates for the CMM Designation must:

- Have a minimum of five years of mail management experience and be currently employed in an in-plant environment. The five years need not be consecutive, but they must be of a managerial nature. Managers who are not members of the In-Plant Printing and Mailing Association must provide written documentation from their employer certifying their position in in-house mail management.
- Pledge to adhere to the CMM Code of Ethics. (Code of Ethics appears on the final page of this brochure).
- Be of high moral character and professional attitude. Candidates must be able to demonstrate, through three letters of recommendation, acceptable character, ability and reputation.

Application Procedures

Individuals who meet the eligibility criteria can apply to take the CMM examination. The examination is administered online at IPMA's annual conference or at educational testing facilities nearest to the applicant. All non-conference testing fees (use of facilities, personnel, and computer) are the responsibility of the applicant.

Candidates for the CMM examination must, at least 30 days prior to the test date, submit to IPMA headquarters:

- A completed CMM designation application and required supporting documentation.
- All required letters of recommendation.
- A registration fee. The fees for IPMA members and non-members are specified on the application form.

IPMA headquarters will review all applications to confirm eligibility. All applicants will be contacted and informed of their status as eligible or ineligible for the examination. Eligible applicants will be sent identification and admission documents which must be presented on examination day.

The CMM Examination

The CMM examination, organized in four parts, consists of multiple-choice and essay questions. The areas for testing include: computer skills, financial management, general management, mail management, personnel management, and technical skills. The entire examination requires approximately six hours to complete (including a lunch break).

The IPMA International Certification Committee coordinates the examination.

Each of the examination's four parts is graded separately. A candidate must score 75 percent or better on each part in order to be certified. Candidates who pass at least two sections of the examination will be required to retake only the sections failed. Others will be required to retake the full examination.

Test results are provided to candidates within 48 hours. Results are reported as "Pass" or "Fail" for each of the four parts. Test results are confidential and can be released to a person or organization other than the candidate only with written consent of the candidate.

Individuals who successfully complete the examination receive a mounted certificate confirming their CMM certification, a CMM lapel pin and a letter of commendation from the IPMA international president. A letter outlining the significance of the achievement also is sent to the candidate's supervisor as well as local media.

Persons who earn certification are authorized and encouraged to use the CMM designation with their name on business cards, letterhead and all other forms of address.

Recertification

CMM certification is an achievement which provides recognition as a professional in the in-house mailing industry. However, continuing professional development is essential to enable in-house mail managers to cope with rapidly changing position requirements. To retain the CMM designation, a mail manager must accumulate 15 professional credits and be recertified every five years following initial certification.

Recertification deadlines occur every five years. The 15 credits required for recertification can be earned at any time during each five-year interval, but a recertification form, with the appropriate member or non-member recertification fee must be submitted prior to each recertification deadline.

IPMA headquarters will notify all CMMs of maintenance requirements and deadline dates.

There are a number of sources through which a CMM can earn recertification credits. They include:

- Membership in IPMA or professional mail manager associations;
- Attending the IPMA annual educational conference or other educational seminars related to mail managers;
- Serving as presenter for IPMA sponsored events;
- Publishing articles related to mail management;
- Serving as a volunteer leader for IPMA or professional mail manager associations;
- Instructing or lecturing on mail management.

Additional information on recertification is available from IPMA headquarters.

Lifetime Certification

A manager who has been certified as a CMM for at least five years can, upon reaching age 60 or retirement, notify IPMA headquarters and request lifetime certification status. Once verified, this status is granted and no further recertification maintenance or reporting is required.

Suspension or Revocation

A CMM who fails to accumulate the required professional credits to meet recertification shall lose certification unless, in the judgment of the IPMA International Certification Committee, extenuating circumstances exist and the deficient credits can be obtained within a reasonably short period of time.

CMM certification can be revoked by the Committee for failure to abide by the CMM Code of Ethics. An individual suspected of violating the code is given written notice of the Committee's intent to revoke certification and an explanation of the alleged violation upon which the action is based. The Committee will provide such individual with an opportunity to respond and explain the alleged breach of conduct.

Reinstatement

Managers who lose CMM certification by failing to earn the required recertification credits can gain reinstatement by:

- Entering the CMM program again and meeting all requirements, including successful completion of the CMM examination, or
- Earning all deficient credits plus five additional credits per year for each year past the recertification deadline.

Fees

The certification application fees for IPMA members and non-members are outlined on the application form, which can be obtained through IPMA headquarters.

Applicants for initial certification have two years from the time of application to take the CMM examination. After the two-year period, all application fees are forfeited if the examination has not been taken.

Applicants who take the examination and fail all or part may retest up to two additional times within a two-year period after the initial examination at no additional fee. Candidates who schedule an examination date but fail to appear at the examination site will incur a rescheduling fee.

The CMM Examination: Scope and Sources

The Certified Mail Manager examination is based on concepts and experiences basic to effective mail management.

Since the effective practice of mail management requires in-depth knowledge of a wide variety of subjects, the scope of the CMM examination is, of necessity, broad. This scope is reflected in the various core competencies of the examination: communication skills, computer skills, financial management, general management, personnel management, mail management, skills application and technical skills.

The CMM examination is intended to be relevant to the overall experiences that in-house managers are likely to encounter. With each candidate having a minimum of five years' management experience, the experience level is assumed to be extensive and broad-based. This, combined with the diversity of functions within the in-house, has prompted IPMA to establish parameters which a candidate can use to prepare for the examination.

IPMA offers, through the IPMA website, a set of terms identified by the Certification Committee, which make up the core competencies of the exam. Candidates should be prepared to address questions on the concepts and practices outlined in this list as they relate to their personal experience in managing an in-house facility.

CMM Code of Ethics

I acknowledge...

That I have an obligation to the in-house mail management industry;
therefore, I shall constantly strive to maintain and improve industry standards.

That I have an obligation to the public at large;
therefore, I shall actively cooperate with other in-house professionals to promote the understanding of the role of in-house operations in support of overall business functions, including copyright laws.

That I have an obligation to fellow Certified Mail Managers;
therefore, I shall be loyal to my fellow CMMs and willingly share the lessons of my experience. Further, I shall not use knowledge of a confidential nature pertaining to the business of a fellow CMM to advance my personal interest.

That I have an obligation to my suppliers;
therefore, I shall uphold the highest standards of business ethics, making only reasonable requests of them as I serve my customers.

That I have an obligation to my customers;
therefore, to affirm and retain their confidence, I shall adhere to a policy of truth in business interchange and shall promise only that which can be fulfilled.

That I have an obligation to my employers or employees whose trust I hold; therefore, I shall endeavor to discharge this obligation to the best of my ability, to guard their interest and to give counsel wisely.

Accepting these obligations as a personal responsibility, I pledge observance and furtherance of the letter and the spirit of the Certified Mail Manager's Code of Ethics as set forth above.
